

IPS Corporation launches full line of high performance residential ventilation products

Durham, North Carolina, March 1, 2017 – The IPS Roofing Products division of IPS Corporation, a leading manufacturer of building and specialty adhesive products, announced today that it will enter the residential attic ventilation category with a wide range of high performance, high efficiency products, complementing its industry leading roof flashings and other roofing accessories products.

Gary Rosenfield, vice president & general manager of the IPS Roofing Products division, commented, “Residential ventilation is a natural extension for us off our leadership position and platform in the residential roofing accessories segment. Through a combination of our own internal product development and partnerships with some of the most innovative and knowledgeable roofing products manufacturing companies in the industry, we are now able to offer this new, exceptional line of products to our roofing distribution customers. This is not only terrific range of ventilation products, it will also ship from the same IPS warehouse locations as utilized for our other roofing products, making it very easy for our customers to do more business with IPS.”

Included in the offering will be the well-recognized SmartVent™ line of eave intake and ridge ventilation products, manufactured by DCI Products Inc. IPS will assume the exclusive distribution rights to this line starting in April, and it will be now be sold under the IPS Roofing Products brand. The patented SmartVent products offer increased air flow, are tapered to provide a smoother appearance, and are easy to install with a nail gun. In addition, a full range of off-ridge ventilation products will be offered, including the first ever UL approved static ventilation products on the market.

The new IPS Roofing Products ventilation line will be on display at the International Roofing Show in Las Vegas from March 1-3, 2017.
